Frederick, MD

The Frederick Flying Cows are excited to announce that rookie sensation Damien Daniels has re-signed with the team for the upcoming season. At just 23 years old, Daniels quickly established himself as a standout player, finishing as one of the top three assist leaders for the Cows, averaging an impressive four assists per game. Last season, Daniels showcased his ability to push the tempo and change the pace of the game, becoming a key contributor to the Cows' offensive strategy. His reliable free throw percentage of 81.8% further solidified his importance on the court.

Before joining the professional ranks, Daniels had a stellar collegiate career at Abilene Christian University, where he earned accolades such as selection to the Southland Conference All-Defensive Team and was named Southland Conference Tournament MVP. As a proud Kansas City native, this past season marked his inaugural foray into professional basketball, and he made an immediate impact.

"I want to thank the organization and Coach Corporal for giving me the opportunity to play professional basketball in a league that is on the rise," Daniels expressed. "This has provided me with a way to showcase my game, and I am excited to continue my journey with the Flying Cows."
